"The South 40" by JAMES A. SMITH EXTENSION AGENT

This spring corn growers have two ways to control sprout-pulling by birds. Since last season EPA has cancelled the registration of Strychine-treated whole corn.

As all corn growers know some years damage from birds is much worse than in other years. No one has come up with a satisfactory explanation of why.

For the 1977 crop 1% Avitrol-treated whole corn will be available and Mesurol 50% hopper box treater. With the Avitrol-treated corn it would be used only if a problem develops. With Mesurol, it would be like buying fire insurance, you may or may not need it.

The Avitrol treated corn is used at the rate of ½ lb. per acre, while Mesurol is used at the rate of 1 pound per 100 pound of seed or 9 oz. per bushel. The manufacturers of Mesurol say that coverage of the seed with Mesurol is essential to giving effective control.

No doubt many farmers are aware that the addition of certain pesticides may increase yields of crops. Several are being introduced quite strongly this spring. At this point I believe we should think of them as an experimental practice and not a general recommendation. Some are reported to give yield increases of 5 to 10 percent. This sounds good, but it could be a waste of money. In order to obtain these kinds of increases you will need to determine that other practices are being followed - - the pH is right, population is maximized, insects and diseases are under control, proper amounts of N, P and K have been applied and good weed control is practiced.

Spark, a formulation of dinitro, is registered for corn, grain only, in Virginia, at the rate of one pint per acre. It is applied over the top of corn when the unemerged tassel is one-half inch long but not more than 6-7 inches long. Corn will be about knee high when the tassel begins to develop.

If you are dairying or have an interest in dairying you should be a member of the Appomattox Dairymen's Association. Clark Lewis is treasurer and dues are only $5.00 a year.

Likewise if you are producing beef cattle - The Appomattox Cattlemen's Association will be a stronger unit with your membership. Bill Williamson is treasurer and again member-dues is $5.00

The cattlemen's group will be eating steaks Monday the 18th at their spring meeting. There will be an interesting educational meeting, also.

We are approaching corn planting time. When planting, take time to plant it correctly. Your better soils can support a higher plant population than the less productive soils. If you are interested in high yields, the short early maturing corn hybrids will need higher population than late corn. Most of the soils that we grow corn on will support 20,000 plants, but because some seed will not come up and other seed will be destroyed by insects or birds, you'll need to plant 22,000 kernels per acre in order to get a final stand of 20,000 plants. If you are planting in 36" rows the spacing should be 7.9 inches between kernels. If the row width is 30 inches, spacing between kernels should be 9.5 inches.

Research in the corn belt states shows a 5 percent yield increase when corn is planted in 30 inch rows rather than 40 inch rows.

"Jacob And The Kitchen Stove"

Jacob Lewis busy at his printing press; incidentally the press is one that his father, the late G. W. Lewis bought in 1928.

Young Jacob Lewis had plenty of work to do–no doubt about that! As a son of the late George Lewis, an industrious, hardworking farmer, chores were never-ending. The Lewis farm produced wheat, hay, corn, and a garden large enough to feed twelve healthy, growing youngsters. Then there were the chickens–more chickens than Jacob cared to think about. Each week approximately three to four cases of eggs were shipped to New York. The gathering and washing of that many eggs was quite a job in itself.

The Lewis children were brought up in a Christian home where they also learned at a very early age the value of work and of accepting responsibilty. So you see, Jacob was not lazy but it was spring and he was just sixteen.

Coincidental with Jacob's touch of spring fever was the arrival in the mail of the most recent copy of Popular Mechanics Magazine. So, it seemed quite natural for Jacob to drop down on the wide front porch and take a look.

Popular Mechanics did not have the monopoly on new ideas; Jacob, born in 1910 to George Washington and Mary Waugh Lewis had a keen, inquisitive mind, always on the alert for something new and challenging. As Jacob read quickly through the magazine, his attention was drawn to one particular article, "How To Build A Printing Press." As he continued to read he was probably unaware of the determination growing within–to build his own printing press.

In a storage building on the farm was an old cookstove, that had, as Jacob expressed it, "played out". Jacob didn't quite know how, but that stove was about to undergo a drastic change.

Just about where Herbert C. Pulliam had his office before his retirement there was a blacksmith shop in the days of THEN. With Jacob's ideas and the blacksmith's know-how that old cookstove was transformed into a printing press. Jacob was in business; his first job was the printing of 1,000 letterhead with matching envelopes for his father.

The Appomattox Printing Company was first located across from where the Wiley Plant Farm was operating; the building is still standing. Next Jacob began operation in a new location on Church Street where he was to remain for the next twenty-one years.

In February of 1941 Jacob went on a blind date–her name was Estelle Vaughan of Victoria. It didn't take Jacob long to realize that he wanted to share his life with her. They were married in December of 1941 and began housekeeping in living quarters on the second floor of the printing business.

As a former telephone operator, Estelle had no experience in the field of printing, but determined to be a good wife, she began to learn the business. At this time Jacob was using a gasoline engine to furnish power to the presses. Estelle remembered many a time when she had to wait for Jacob to get the engine started before she could begin printing. Later they acquired an electric engine.

In 1942 the Appomattox Printing Company printed the telephone directory for the local telephone company owned and operated by Herbert C. Pulliam. Jacob sold ads to cover the cost of printing and materials and the hand-set directory didn't cost Mr. Pulliam anything at all! Estelle told me that they used the money derived from the directory to purchase their first bedroom suite.

At present the Appomattox Printing Company is located in a neat, modern building adjacent to the Lewis home on Oakley Avenue. In their home are many beautiful antiques, some handed down in the families and other purchased and refinished.

The parents of six children, Luther, Catherine, Ray, John, Bill, and Nancy, the Lewis family has much to keep them busy. Though semi-retired, Jacob, with the help of Estelle still does quite a lot of printing. Quite recently Estelle was printing laundry tickets when the chase and the type fell off the press and was broken. To quote Jacob, "we've had our share of ups and downs but it has been good."

Hard work is not stranger to Jacob and Estelle. As a child Estelle recalls getting up at the early hour of five each morning; on Sunday they were often allowed to sleep to six.

Laughingly, Estelle recalled an incident from her childhood. It seems her grandfather was critically ill at this particular time and she and her brother were splitting and loading firewood on a childs wagon and taking it into the house. They had just completed the thirteenth load and her brother got awfully tired. Estelle was tired too but insisted that they at least haul in a fourteenth load. Her brother however won out and they quit after the thirteenth load. Their grandfather died—Estelle was not only grieved at the loss of her grandfather but was convinced it was because they had stopped hauling wood at the "unlucky 13th" load! It just have taken quite a bit of talking to convince her otherwise.

For Jacob, as in the days of THEN he hand sets the type, and the press is hand fed. Regardless of the method he uses, his work speaks for itself, a job well done.

The people of Appomattox County thank you Jacob for your contribution as a businessman, familyman, and most of all a christian friend and neighbor.

KIRKWOOD OTEY AND APPOMATTOX CHAPTERS UDC MET TUESDAY

The Kirkwood Otey Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy met in Appomattox, Tuesday, April 5, 1977 for their regular meeting. The program took place in the guest tavern on the National Historical Park grounds.

Mrs. W. Warren Craghead, a member of the chapter, spoke on Stone Mountain near Atlanta, Ga., which features bas-relief carved figures of Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson.

She also discussed the influence General Garland's and General Rodes' families had on the cultural life of Lynchburg. Later in the meeting Mrs. Craghead read from a diary her grandfather kept during the Civil War.

Mrs. T. M. Cunningham, President, and members of the Appomattox Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy were at the National Park to greet the Kirkwood Otey members and met with them. They, too, had the opportunity to hear and enjoy Mrs. Craghead's interesting program.

After the meeting, members of both Chapters enjoyed refreshments and a social hour at The John Mosby Inn.

OAKVILLE RURITANS HEAR COUNTY LIBRARIAN

Mrs. Margaret Glover, County Librarian, presented a very informative discussion concerning the county library at the regular meeting of the Oakville Ruritan Club on Thursday, April 7.

Among the very interesting points made by Mrs. Glover were the following: the county library was founded on April 12, 1940; it has approximately 14,000 volumes; 1976 circulation was about 21,000; it offers a wonderful opportunity for county citizens; it has films, magazines and records for loan; and it has several areas of need.

The prime need is money for new books. Many of the reference books are quite old. County citizens can donate money for purchase of new books and these contributions would be tax deductable.

Another need is books that have been used. The library would be happy to receive books, with right of refusal of books it cannot use.

In short, Mrs. Glover urged county citizens to support and use the library to a greater extent.

Other matters that were acted upon by the club included partial sponsorship of a child to Camp Easter Seal, setting of the date tentatively for the annual auction sale on June 18, agreement to help sponsor the parade for the Railroad Festival the week end of October 8-9.
